The University of Maine School of Law is on the move. Our engagement regionally and nationally has heightened the Law School’s identity, as we build upon the foundation of an excellent learning environment, a robust community of teachers and scholars, and a pervasive ethic of public service. Generous support from our alumni and friends is a crucial ingredient in making this great law school even better. You are central to this success.

In this Report, we look back and look forward. We celebrate the impressive results of the Law School’s 2006-2007 Annual Fund campaign and foreshadow the continuing growth in philanthropic support for the Law School. Profiles of selected alumni and friends reflect the strength and commitment of our extended community.

Rebekah Smith (’98) and Patrick Mellor (’98), who met in law school, sustain the tradition of public service and look back to their rich experience at Maine Law. Dr. Edward David (’87), Maine’s Deputy Chief Medical Examiner, made a major donation this year to recruit and retain distinguished professors and reflects on the value of his education. Ira Waldman (’77) credits his law school years at Maine for his successful career in real estate practice in California. Roger Putnam, recipient of the 2008 Muskie Access to Justice Award, reflects the best of Maine Law School’s values with a lifetime of service to justice in Maine. And, the Bernsteins make it a family affair, with Louis, Roz, and Andrew Bernstein all graduating from Maine Law, and with Israel and Sumner Bernstein and Beth Bernstein Schneider all engaged through the years.

As Maine’s public law school, we take our public responsibility seriously. Clinical programs involve students in rigorous learning and legal practice, representing clients in need through the Cumberland Legal Aid Clinic and assisting inventors and entrepreneurs through the Intellectual Property Clinic. Our Center for Law and Innovation and Patent Program are important players in state economic development policy and in technology transfer initiatives throughout the University of Maine System. The Law School, in collaboration with the Muskie School for Public Service (University of Southern Maine), the Margaret Chase Smith Policy Center (University of Maine at Orono), and the Maine Development Foundation, is establishing a non-partisan public policy center in Augusta to assist legislators and other public officials.

Our students continue to shine, with our graduates achieving over a 90% pass rate on the recent Maine Bar Exam and launching a wide array of careers. The Maine Law School continues to be a destination point — for diverse students, excellent faculty, and visiting scholars and lecturers. Last Fall, international law expert and Yale Law School Dean Harold Koh delivered a lecture on restoring our human rights reputation. Kenneth Feinberg shared a moving account of his experience as Special Master for the Federal September 11th Victim Compensation Fund. Former U.S. Senator George Mitchell was our Graduation keynote speaker in 2007, a role filled in 2008 by retired U.S. Circuit Court Judge Frank Coffin. Judith Kaye, Chief Judge of New York, will lecture on law and public service in Fall 2008. Laura Underkuffer, distinguished professor at Duke University Law School, will return to Maine Law next semester as a visiting faculty member, teaching our first-year property law class for a third year in a row. And, our core faculty sustain Maine Law’s vibrant educational program and generate cutting edge scholarship in step with national and global issues.

As we celebrate the success of the Annual Fund campaign, we underscore the importance of philanthropy in the wake of diminishing government support. In 2006-07, we exceeded our goal of $315,000, with over 800 donations and more than a few five-figure gifts. We anticipate even greater success as we near the end of the 2007-08 campaign. Thanks to you and your generous support, we are able to fund professorships and research grants to retain stellar faculty. The Annual Fund enables us to provide scholarships and attract the best and brightest students from Maine and from away. Summer fellowships support law student placement in public interest legal work, locally and around the globe. We recently launched a new endowment fund in honor of Vincent L. McKusick, former Chief Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, designed to provide support at the Maine Law School for students from socio-economically disadvantaged backgrounds. With a goal of increasing diversity among law students and lawyers in Maine, the Portland law firm of Pierce Atwood has pledged the first $100,000 in our campaign to raise significantly more in the coming years.

The promise for the future is enormous, even as the challenges loom large. With support from the University of Maine School of Law Foundation, we have undertaken an architectural programming study for a new, state-of-the-art law center. Over time, a new building on the coast of Maine will amplify the strength of our program—grounded in the local environment and reflecting excellence nationally and abroad. We all know that the University of Maine School of Law is a unique and wonderful institution. I look forward to working together with you to maintain the best of Maine Law and to build for the future. Thank you for all that you do.

Peter Putnoff, Dean June 2008
The Bernstein family’s roots in Maine’s legal community extend back to 1915, when Israel Bernstein opened his solo practice in downtown Portland. He was later joined by his brother, Louis, then his son Sumner. Bernstein, Shur, Sawyer, and Nelson, created in 1964, has since become one of the leading firms in Northern New England.

The family connection to Maine Law began in the 1930s when Louis attended Portland University Law School, a predecessor to Maine Law. Fifty years later, Sumner’s wife Roz (’88) attained a life-long goal by obtaining a law degree at the age of 57. “It was so rewarding to be part of a new era when women were beginning to see law as a possible career.”

Roz and the late Sumner Bernstein are among Portland’s leading philanthropists, contributing to the Law School as well as many educational, arts and cultural institutions throughout the Portland area. “One of the joys of living in Portland and in Maine is that one individual can make a big difference,” said Roz. “Indeed, it’s a great reason to attend Maine Law. Portland is one of America’s best small cities.”

Roz serves on the University of Maine School of Law Foundation Board, which she joined in August of 2005. In addition, she served as founding chair of the University of Southern Maine Board of Visitors, and Roz and Sumner were both founding members of the Law School Board of Visitors, a board on which Roz still serves today. In 1997, she received the L. Kinvin Wroth Distinguished Alumna Award.

Among the family’s early contributions to Maine Law were Louis Bernstein’s endowment of the Law School’s District Court Internship Program and the Israel Bernstein Scholarship Fund, which was later changed to include Sumner’s name, posthumously. In 2004, the School established the Sumner T. Bernstein Professorship of Law to honor Sumner’s public and professional service, his vibrant legal practice, community activism, and contributions to Maine Law. Beth Bernstein Schneider, Roz and Sumner’s daughter, hopes this professorship will promote excellence in teaching and research, and foster intellectual exchange between faculty and students. “My father loved teaching in his professional and personal life. Rarely a day went by in the Bernstein house without what is now called a ‘teachable moment.’ He reveled in working with kindergarten students and with law students and faculty, and this openness will, I hope, be the hallmark of the Sumner T. Bernstein professors.” Schneider is the Director of Education for the Royal Academy of Art in London, and recently received the Distinguished National Museum Educator Award of the National Association of Museum Educators. Professor Jennifer Wriggins recently was named the first Sumner T. Bernstein Professor at Maine Law.

Roz supports Maine Law because of the rewards it has brought to her. “I have been enriched by so many experiences and exposed to a broad range of people, institutions, and friendships. I want to continue to support institutions that have been important to me in my lifetime. I was always taught that the only immortality that we enjoy is the good name that we leave behind.”

Roz and Sumner’s son, Andy, is a 1977 graduate of Bowdoin College and a 1980 Maine Law alumnus and lives in Cape Elizabeth. He serves as Vice President and Chief Counsel for Disability Reinsurance Management Services in Westbrook, Maine. “When I hear the stories of students who don’t have the independent means to go to law school, it means an incredible amount to me to be able to support them directly through a scholarship and professorship that honor my father and grandfather.” Andy has served on the Alumni Association Board since 2006. He also is the Class Agent for his law school class. While attending Maine Law, he served as Comments Editor of the Maine Law Review. Another of his major accomplishments was the formation, with fellow law students, of the oldies rock ‘n roll band, originally named “Danny and the Groovetones” (for Dan Boutin, ’80) and later named “The Wringtups.”

The sustained and growing support of the Annual Fund from our Alumni and Friends allows us to provide scholarship aid, summer fellowships, clinical programs, and vibrant student life at the Law School. In 2006-2007, more than $320,000 was raised by 836 donors for the Annual Fund.

The best use of life is to invest in something that will outlast life.”  — William James
Roger A. Putnam
Roger A. Putnam, special counsel to Portland law firm Verrill Dana, is one of Maine’s very active public servants, having served in numerous roles, including Assistant Attorney General from 1951 to 1958. He is the 2008 recipient of the Muskie Access to Justice Award for his career-long commitment to work that has strengthened Maine’s civil justice system for all people.

Verrill Dana, where Putnam started 50 years ago, is one of northern New England’s leading law firms and also one of the largest employers of graduates from Maine Law. “I haven’t counted noses around here lately, but I would say there are a substantial number of graduates. I would encourage any of my grandchildren to give very serious consideration to Maine Law, perhaps for the particular reason that I have had an opportunity to work with many of its end products.”

Putnam is a member of the Board of Visitors for the Law School and was instrumental, along with Professor and former Dean Colleen Khoury, in creating the Lewis V. Vafiades Scholarship Fund, which was established in honor of a well-known Bangor lawyer and friend of Putnam to assist students from northern Maine. “I give because I have great faith in those who operate the Law School and have witnessed the great benefits to students.” Putnam was a generous donor to the “Foundations for the Future” capital campaign and was a member of the Law School’s capital campaign cabinet.

Currently, Putnam chairs the Maine Judicial Ethics Committee, appointed by the Maine Supreme Judicial Court, and is a former member and past president of the board of the Maine Equal Justice Project. Putnam is a fellow of the American Bar Association and Maine State Bar Association, and has served on the board of directors of the Maine Bar Foundation. He currently serves as chair of the Maine Executive Committee of the Newcomen Society of the United States.

Dr. Edward David
Dr. Edward David (’87) graduated from Allegheny College in 1961 and the University of Pennsylvania Medical School in 1965. He came to Maine Law in 1984 to further his education in forensic medicine, having previously practiced medicine as a neurologist and having served in the armed forces. Appointed a Medical Examiner in 1980, David was named Deputy Chief Medical Examiner in the Maine Office of the Chief Medical Examiner in 1988.

“When I was a student, it meant a lot to me that classes were small. We had a close group.” David also credits the talented faculty and appreciates that they have practical experience. “This gave a real world approach and meaning to what was being taught. It allowed me to get a sense of how the law was pursued outside of the classroom. I was a non-traditional student in my late 40’s with an advanced degree (M.D.) and had experienced the difference between the classroom and the real world, so I could really appreciate the difference.”

David has been contributing to Maine Law because he prizes education. “I wouldn’t have received an education in law but for Maine Law. I give so that students can be assured that they are getting the best quality education possible.” He gives specifically toward faculty retention and recruitment and has included the school in his estate plan. “Hopefully, it will help the school hold on to its accomplished faculty by encouraging them with financial incentives to pursue their interests and pass new knowledge along to students.”

Ira Waldman
When Ira Waldman (’76) attended Maine Law, he found “a first-rate faculty that does first-rate teaching and produces first-rate lawyers. The students who graduate from Maine Law are every bit as capable as the students who graduate from any other top law school in the country.”

After graduating, Waldman worked for four years at Unum as legal counsel servicing the real estate investment department, then moved to Los Angeles to practice real estate law. “The fantastic education I received at Maine Law at a more than reasonable cost is what prepared me for the path of my career from Unum to partnership at a major firm, as well as the work that I do with various professional organizations. The value of that education is incalculable. No matter how much time or money I give to the Law School, it can barely compensate for the education I received.”

“Although I really appreciate those who choose to stay in Maine and serve the state, I try to show by way of example that there are other opportunities around the country that can be plenty rewarding, both professionally and monetarily. Of course, the latter enables one to contribute cold hard cash more than many. Unfortunately, given the available funds in the State, we just need more of those who are willing to seek career advancement out of state, but will not forget the value (and values) they got from the institution that provided the essential foundation for their success.”

“I am very proud of my education. Whenever I lecture or am on a panel it is important to me to be introduced as a graduate of the University of Maine School of Law. I want people to know that, if they appreciate what I am doing, Maine Law made it possible.”

Since August 2001, Waldman has served on the University of Maine School of Law Foundation Board. “It is a way to give back in more than a monetary way.”

A native of New Jersey, Waldman is a partner at Cox, Castle and Nicholson LLP in Los Angeles. He lives in Playa del Rey, California, with his wife Laurie. Their two children, Ethan and Shayna, are currently students at Bates College.
The Foundation during the past year:

- Formally committed to assist the Law School in raising $100,000 for the purpose of planning for a new law center. This is the initial budget for this critical planning process and the Law School will undoubtedly need access to additional planning funds in the future.

- Reviewed the formal working relationship between the Foundation and the Law School and agreed on procedures to clarify the parties’ respective roles and responsibilities and improve the Foundation’s effectiveness.

- Reviewed the Foundation’s mission and vision with the benefit of six years experience and began updating its mission during the next several years.

- Committed to provide financial support to the Law School to succeed retiring Director John Gundersdorf. With support from the Foundation, the Law School successfully hired a new Director of Development, Elena Brandt, in February 2007.

- Continued to pursue mini-campaigns, particularly in support of endowed professorships. These efforts gave rise to an ambitious plan for a diversity scholarship endowment expected major fundraising to be undertaken with respect to the first generation of Board members who will be reaching their term limits.

- The tangible results of the Foundation’s efforts during the past year, though, are the most important and exciting news of all. The Foundation’s funds grew approximately 30% to almost $2.7 million in value through receipts of pledges, receipts of new gifts, and returns on investments. The Foundation’s efforts during the past year: (1) to strengthen the committees and the Foundation’s internal processes in preparation for the expected major fundraising to be undertaken with respect to the new law center; (2) to assist the Dean in raising planning funds for the new law center; (3) to serve as vocal promoters of the law center in our communities; (4) to assist the Law School in its ABA reaccreditation process, and (5) to bring "new blood" into the Foundation Board to serve as successors to the first generation of Board members who will be reaching their term limits.

The Foundation also began a process to attract new talent and leadership to the Foundation. Since the first Board meeting in August, 2001, the membership of the Board has been quite stable. With term limits and other changes looming in the next few years, however, the Directors recognized that recruitment efforts for new members and leaders should be augmented promptly. David Evans was elected President of the Foundation at the annual meeting of the Foundation in August, 2007. He outlined the following goals for the ensuing year: (1) to strengthen the committees and the Foundation’s internal processes in preparation for the expected major fundraising to be undertaken with respect to the new law center; (2) to assist the Dean in raising planning funds for the new law center; (3) to serve as vocal promoters of the law center in our communities; (4) to assist the Law School in its ABA reaccreditation process, and (5) to bring “new blood” into the Foundation Board to serve as successors to the first generation of Board members who will be reaching their term limits.

The Foundation increased its payouts for the past year by 36% to a total annual distribution of over $74,000. It has taken the Foundation six years to reach this level of support of the Law School. In the next six years, however, the Foundation will be even more effective in dramatically increasing such support. It recognizes the challenges facing the Law School, and it is committed to help the Law School meet those challenges.

Preparing For New Challenges

The University of Maine School of Law Foundation in the past year began to take important steps to prepare for imminent and significant challenges in the pursuit of its mission:

To raise, manage and distribute funds for the support and improvement of the University of Maine School of Law and the education it provides, so that it will become an internationally recognized law school.

The Foundation during the past year:

- Formally committed to assist the Law School in raising $100,000 for the purpose of planning for a new law center. This is the initial budget for this critical planning process and the Law School will undoubtedly need access to additional planning funds in the future.

- Reviewed the formal working relationship between the Foundation and the Law School and agreed on procedures to clarify the parties’ respective roles and responsibilities and improve the Foundation’s effectiveness.
